

2009 – Building On The Success Story

While the end result of the race was less controversial in 2009, the spectacle of the only Formula One night Grand Prix on the calendar and the intensity of the on-track action was undiminished.

Reigning world champion Lewis Hamilton won for McLaren-Mercedes, ahead of the Toyota of Germany's Timo Glock, while Fernando Alonso claimed third place fair and square to regain some much needed prestige for the Renault team.

Lewis promptly paid tribute to the Marina Bay Street Circuit on which he scored the 12th victory of his career. "It's a fabulous track," said the 24-year-old Briton. "The fans are fantastic and they put on a great show here." Close to 240,000 tickets were sold for the three-day event.

In addition to the on-track action, the Singapore Grand Prix organisers offered some spectacular additional entertainment throughout the race weekend, with over 200 performers strutting their stuff around the spectator areas of the Marina Bay street circuit.

Artists led by rock band Travis, Chaka Khan and Backstreet Boys added even more excitement, all within the price of the regular admission ticket. Large-scale theatre acts and top DJs further ensured a weekend to remember, while for those seeking even more entertainment, a series of F1 Rocks™ concerts in neighbouring Fort Canning Park brought in yet more performers.
